

Contents

Number 171 | Jan/Feb 2022

- 3 Focus on... nature of science
- 4 Notice Board
- 5 In conversation with... Professor Brad Gibson
- 7 Different approaches to teaching primary science: the role of the teacher is what makes the difference
Alison Eley encourages teachers to focus on what is happening when effective teaching and learning are taking place
- 11 Working scientifically with fruit and vegetable batteries
Andy Markwick and Amy White outline how the well-known fruit-and-vegetable battery experiment can be an effective platform to support learning through exploration
- 15 Teaching children about the nature of science by exploring big questions
Laura Hackett and Sherralyn Simpson recount how they have developed children's understanding of how science and other disciplines relate
- 19 The art and science of creativity
Dr Helen Mason introduces the SunSpaceArt project, which aims to support science learning in creative ways
- 23 Nature Friendly Schools: our wild journey
Matt Clark describes how his school uses the outdoors to explore the nature of science
- 27 Making science work in the new Curriculum for Wales
Verity Jones outlines how the Darwin Experience has helped to provide scientific experiences that support the new curriculum
- 31 Teaching primary science outdoors
Helen Spring's new book aims to demonstrate how simple it is to take science lessons outdoors
- 33 Why using reading books in science shouldn't be overlooked
Rose Edmondson shares how integrating reading books into science teaching broadens children's science learning experiences and deepens their understanding
- 36 Reviews

Cover: Working scientifically with fruit and veg – page 11

Primary Science

Editor Robert Collins

Investigating big questions – page 15

A creative approach to science – page 19

Science in the new Welsh curriculum – page 27

Teaching primary science outdoors – page 31

Executive Editor Helen Johnson

ASE editorial contact Jane Hanrott

Design/page makeup Karen Dyer

Advertising Rebecca Dixon-Watmough